About ...00 letters and several bags of newspapers comprised to-day's mail. Something like eighty telegrams were also received to-day, in reply to a congratulatory character, as were also ...his letters. Heretofore General Harrison ... to acknowledge its receipt, but with such an extraordinary ... he now finds the task will be too great for him to undertake as it would occupy his entire time. In view of these circumstances General Harrison this evening requested a correspondent of the ...ociated press to publicly convey his cordial thanks to several thousand friends throughout the nation who have telegraphed or sent by letter their warm expression of congratulation and best wishes. He was very particular to impress upon the correspondent that it would have afforded him real pleasure to personally acknowledge the receipt of every communication, and up to to-day this was his intention, but an inventory of over seven thousand telegrams and letters, with several hundred additional letters arriving each day, has caused him to reluctantly abandon the attempt to answer individually, and he asks the press of the country to extend his kind and warmest thanks to his congratulating friends. Nothing has more profoundly impressed the correspondent than the enthusiastic and heartfelt expressions in the thousands of telegrams and letters he has received. Nearly two thousand of these telegrams and letters were of such a purely personal character that General Harrison felt it might be considered indelicate for him to permit their ... although many of them are from people of political or social distinction. Besides this class of telegrams there are fully 2000 from men and women in the humbler walks of life, who express their feelings of admiration in the warmest of personal terms, which while exceedingly gratifying to him and calling forth his frequent mention in conversation, yet ... references enjoin him from offering them to the public.

INDIANAPOLIS, November 12 — A great number of Knights of Labor delegates to the general assembly are arriving in the city to attend the session which begins to-morrow. Considerable interest, which it is thought will be satisfactorily adjusted, there is a report of a contest in district assembly No 49 of New York. The hole ... about of the extreme bow and at its lowest point about five feet above water line. This is on the starboard side. A small hole was also punched in the plate on the port side directly opposite. The Cunard people tell the following story:

The Umbria left her dock on Saturday morning at 10 o'clock with 215 cabin passengers, 60 intermediate passengers and 129 steerage. Sandy Hook was reached at 12 12 p. m. and the pilot left ... The weather was hazy and was growing thicker all the time. At 1 30 the ship was slowed down on account of the thick fog. About five minutes later the steamer's whistle was heard on what appeared to be the starboard bow. Captain McMickin was on the bridge. DENVER, November 12 — The Central Trust company of New York ... in the United States district court began a foreclosure suit against the Denver and South Park railroad as principal and the Union Pacific as interested party for recovery of the principal of $3,500,000 and interest which has not been paid since January, 1884, and which now amounts to a million dollars. The principal is secured by a first mortgage on 300 miles of railroad, telegraph lines, rolling stock and equipments.

The plaintiffs also allege that the South Park Co. is insolvent and pray the court to appoint a receiver. The argument upon the case will be heard to-morrow. An effort is being made, however, to settle the matter without further process of the court. The Union Pacific becomes a party to the suit by reason of a transfer to it of all rights and franchises of the South Park Co by that company subsequently to the transaction between the Central Trust Co and the South Park.

About 150 of the young republicans of the county boarded the 3 o'clock Midland train for Denver yesterday afternoon to participate in the grand jubilee last night. Quite a number went from Colorado City, and they had the school bell which excited so much mirth on Friday night stationed in the baggage car. Its delightful clanging kept things lively at the depot all the time the train stopped there. A majority of the party returned on a special last night, but a number remained and will come in to-day.

The Boston Herald has the following to say about the Boston Quintette club who will give a grand concert in the opera house next Wednesday evening: "Such music as the Boston Quintette club rendered last evening at Music hall I heard very seldom in a lifetime. The listener is enraptured by the ravishing tones, and marvels that such perfection can be reached by human manipulation. The music that the Quintette produces cannot be described, one may feel but may not express the effect it were as easy to express the sighing, moaning, whispering and wailing cadences of a midsummer's tempest, as to tell how the music last evening appealed. Every number on the programme was a delight, and a more appreciative audience never gathered in the hall to show its delight. Almost every number received an encore. It is impossible to say which pleased most, for after every selection the house looked as though the last was the best of all. Every solo effort seemed the perfection of instrumentation, and probably nothing better will ever be heard until a new order of instruments shall have been devised. Every player seemed to possess a necromantic power over his instrument, so mystic were the harmonic effects; admiration and astonishment are blended while listening to such musical discourse. Wondrous beyond all is the violoncello, the work of Bluemberg, it surpasses belief; must be seen to be heard. Miss Carpenter has a very soprano voice, and last night, after her rest of two days from her ocean voyage, was in control in its full power and beauty. Miss of the manuals order is highly prized by some. The audience was very much larger than the diagram had indicated, and one more pleased has never left Music hall.

WHAT THE GIRLS SAY.

Miss D'Arcy and her cousin, Miss Agnes Archbold Dolar, have just returned to Council Bluffs from their long absence. They tell us, privately, that the most glorious event of their trip were the luxurious Palace Cars run by the Wabash Route, together with the fine meals and attentive waiters. They all take it.

BEST LINE EAST.

The Union Pacific Ry is by all odds the "Best Line East" to take for the fast time it makes, and the many comfortable hours for leaving Denver. Also the close connection that is made in Union depots with the trunk lines from Kansas City, Council Bluffs, St. Louis, Chicago, and all the principal cities in the east. The U. P. Ry. is also the short line to the Pacific Coast, running two solid daily, west and four trains to the east daily. The excursion trains from Colorado Springs make close connections in Denver with the Union Pacific Ry. m&f-tf

The New York Evening Post accepts the defeat of President Cleveland very gracefully and says that General Harrison is a man of irreproachable personal character

The poor mugwumps have proved themselves veritable Jonahs in this election. Cleveland, Miller and Hewitt was their ticket and it was snowed under.

The St. Louis Globe Democrat says that the prize as banner republican state of the union belongs to Kansas. St. Louis evidently has not yet received the returns from Colorado

Democratic papers are now discussing the various causes which led to the election of General Harrison. The principal cause was the deliberate and intelligent judgment of the American people.

It seems that the Hon. Joseph Chamberlain's negotiations while in this country were not all as unsuccessful as the fisheries treaty. The announcement of his engagement to Miss Endicott is conclusive proof of this.

The great struggle is over and the election of a republican president has been [illegible] This week the people turn to their accustomed avocations and our great nation will continue on its onward course of prosperity as if the greatest political fight ever known in this country had never occurred.

The annual meeting of the Women's National Indian association which was held in Philadelphia last week was the largest and most enthusiastic gathering of the kind that has ever been held. The interest in the good work of civilizing the Indians by means of education and evangelization was evidenced in all the proceedings.

The Chicago anarchists had intended having a great public demonstration on last Sunday, the anniversary of the hanging of Engel, Spies, Fischer and Parsons, but the chief of police of that city promptly refused the necessary permit. His refusal is to be commended. The executed anarchists were murderers and their death on the gallows was the well merited reward of their crimes. Every effort to have them remembered as martyrs will be frowned on by law abiding citizens and should be opposed by the authorities

The prohibition party may congratulate itself on one victory in the late election. The success of the saloon candidate for governor of New York was largely due to the assistance which he received from the third party. David B. Hill was a saloon keepers' attorney before he entered public life. He was nominated to the office which he now holds by saloon keepers and their friends. During his term in the gubernatorial chair he especially championed the saloon interests. As a reward for his efforts in their behalf he received a renomination at the hands of the saloon clique. Opposed to Hill was Warner Miller, the life long avowed enemy of the liquor traffic. Mr. Miller stood on a temperance platform and made an open fight for that cause, prepared to accept defeat if necessary for the sake of his principles. The issue between these two candidates was well defined. From the beginning to the end the line was distinctly drawn. There could be no misunderstanding it. The saloon was arrayed against the holy cause of temperance. With this issue at stake and these two candidates to choose between the prohibitionists chose to vote for the saloon candidate. The fight is over. Hill is elected. The saloon has triumphed. The liquor dealers themselves never struck a harder blow at the temperance cause than the prohibitionists have done. They have won a victory of which they must be proud

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Sketches of Its Leading Members—Gossip in the Lobby and Chamber.

[Special Dispatch.]

REFORM CLUB, LONDON, Nov. 3, '88

The late chief secretary for Ireland John Morley, is rather above medium height and of slender build. His face, which is clean shaven, is thin and expressive. He looks younger than he is, which is perhaps the result of his slender figure and clean face. Mr. Morley is a remarkable instance of rapid progress in the house of commons. Returned to parliament for the first time in 1883, he was in 1886 offered the important position of chief secretary for Ireland. This he had to give up, a few months afterwards, when the Gladstone government was defeated. As chief secretary for Ireland his path was smoothed and made easier by the fact of his being recognized by the Irish themselves as a real friend and helper. But even this still left the office a very difficult and arduous one, and the five or six months during which Mr. Morley was in the thick of the fight told very heavily upon him. The right honorable gentleman had, previous to his entrance into the house of commons, won a brilliant reputation as a man of letters, and had to abandon a great literary career in order to go to parliament. The gain to politics has undoubtedly in his case been a loss, and a serious loss, to literature. His great literary ability has, however, been of immense service to him in the preparation of speeches for he has never yet stood quite firmly on his feet in the house of commons. Naturally he is a clever speaker bringing out his ideas with fluency and ease, and speaking in clear, incisive tones. Added to this he has great powers of expression in gesture and feature, which makes him usually most interesting, not to say attractive. But in the house he never does himself justice, seeming to be somewhat nervous and hasty. He has greatly improved in this respect since first coming to the house, and every speech marks progress. Mr. Morley is a young man, and will no doubt put all this nervousness to flight and give him the same ease and freedom in the house that is his elsewhere. He is admitted by both sides to be a thoroughly earnest, straightforward and honest politician. In the country his influence is second only to that of Mr. Gladstone, and upon him the hopes of the radicals center.

Though not now a member of the government, the brightest and cleverest man on the conservative side of the house, is beyond doubt Lord Randolph Churchill. He is at once the pride and despair of his party. Everybody likes him, but nobody is quite sure which side he will take, how he will speak, and how he will vote. Occasionally he shocks conservative susceptibilities by trumpeting forth some extreme radical idea. And they only forgive him because they think he is led away by his Henry Fenty Affleck and Beresford theories, but in accordance with fact that he is more liberal than tory. Lord Randolph sat a considerable time in the house in silence. But he suddenly blossomed out, making a brilliant, sarcastic speech, and completely doubling up his opponent. He was at one time leader of the fourth party. This party was called the "fourth" because there were at that time three other parties—the liberal tory and Parnellite. The fourth party though was "fourth" in another respect, consisting of four persons only: Lord Churchill, Mr. Balfour, Sir John Gorst and Sir Henry Drummond Wolfe.

Whilst chancellor of the exchequer Lord Randolph did all he could to economize and resigned because the tories wanted more money than he cared to let them have. He is hard to beat a bargain on questions of finance. When out of office he lets no opportunity pass of urging economy. He launches out right and left on the "iniquitous waste of public money" and pleads for retrenchment in every department.
